Mr. Robert Ball is in jail to await the action of the next grand jury for the killing of Wm. Deppé, and the witnesses have been placed under bonds to appear at the same time. Mr. Ball's defense will be that he was afraid of bodily harm from Deppé and that he acted promptly in the shooting in what he considered self-defense. As to this S-ENTINEL has nothing to say at this time.
One life has been taken and for this another is in jeopardy, and it is not our intention to say anything that will prejudice the community against the accused.
The gun with which the killing was done was a 40-70 Winchester, and the bullet which went through Deppé's body and was found by marshal Grant, was scarcely dented, so close were the men together.

Alert Fire Co. No. 1 held its regular semi-annual meeting Jan. 11th and elected the following officers: A. V. R.
Snyder, president; L. M. Churchill, vice president; H. D. Campbell, secretary; J.
Cole, treasurer; John Schuler, foreman;
Fred Wiggs, 1st assistant foreman;
Adolph Engstrom, 2nd assistant foreman.
The company decided to have their second annual ball Feb. 14th, and a committee of three was appointed to make arrangements.

WRANGELL, Alaska, Jan. 16, 1903.
DEAN MR. SNYDER.—My little daughter Alice died this morning at 3 o'clock, after an illness of several months of consumption. Her age was 9 years and 2 months. My poor wife is prostrated, she being all alone for the last two mos-to watch and look after the three deaths we have had in our family. Mrs. Huffman, another daughter, is also very ill and in her bed. Yours Sincerely,
LOUIS COURTNE.

And Wrangell has another young man added to her business circles, Mr. R. O.
Thomas having associated himself with Mrs. Wheeler in the business of the Wrangell Drug Co. Mr. Thomas is a fine appearing young man, and we wish him success in his new venture.

A letter to the S-ENTINEL from our friend O. F. Nelson, informs us that the Chief has been enjoying himself at Spokane during his absence from Wrangell.
His address will be 108 Main street,
Seattle; but he expects to be at Wrangell
the coming season.

J. A. Mason and several other parties interested have given to H. H. Hunter an option on the Escot mining properties at a figure that we are not now at liberty to divulge. We can say, however, that the terms of the contract and the stipulated price are sufficient to show that Mr. Hunter has great faith in the Escot properties.

We are judged not by the poetry we applaud, but by the plain prose we apply.

More good is done by dispensing good cheer than by giving away dollars.

Come to think of it, when you were a boy sour milk biscuits always made you feel younger.

Kink Head is a name which comes from Kentucky to go thundering down the ages with Duke Potts and Pod Dismuke.

A woman's clothes are so near her innermost soul that the care she takes of them often furnishes an infallible guide to her true character.

It is Dr. Gurnausius who remarks that the day of the boy orator has gone. But there is nothing in this statement to arouse any deep regret.

George Ade should be more careful. If John D. finds out that there is so much money in writing comic operas he will be taking over the business himself.

Legal steps have been taken to stop flirting in the Cathedral at Norwich, England. Of course, this is indecorous conduct, but it might lead to some extra services for the dominie.

The beekeepers' association will pay $1,000 to anyone who can prove that honeycomb is artificially manufactured. The members believe it is hard to beat the busy bee at its business.

A writer in Farm and Fireside says that if hornets are handled gently they will be come as docile as butterflies. How are you treating your hornets— harshly or kindly? Pause and reflect.

A Kentucky woman has died of cancer which was caused by wearing high-heeled shoes. If her heels had deprived her of a chance to marry a title some of the ladies might decide to quit wearing high ones.

New York is to have a ten-story public school building which will hold from 7,500 to 8,000 pupils. It is, of course, to be located in one of the poorest parts of the city. They don't need school buildings of that kind in the more fashionable quarters.

It is safe to say that if Russia had not been somewhat busy in Manchuria Colonel Youngusband would have been a pretty old husband before he succeeded in bulldozing the Tibetan lamas into that "treaty," whereby Tibet surrenders her autonomy to Great Britain. There is even a possibility that the treaty will yet be revised, once the Muscovite finds himself foot-loose.

Motherhood and art have different ideals, but they may become allies to overthrow the dull monster, common sense. The architect who designed the restoration of the Protestant Church at Speyer, capital of the Rhine Palatinate, planned a chancel window with seven angel heads, which should be portraits of the Emperor's children, each at the age of four. The Emperor objected, like any other mere man, that his children are not angels. But the Empress was pleased with the idea, and legitimized herself with the artist, and of course the Emperor gave way to the mother.

The real winning of the West is not an accomplished fact. It has but just begun. And the work that is now being prosecuted in the West is more important than any that has preceded it and more interesting. What the West needs is water. And that is what the government and private enterprise are gradually supplying. If he be one of the most useful of men who makes two blades of grass where but one grew before, then what monuments do the workers deserve who make unlimited harvests grow on land that formerly produced nothing, who turn the desert into a garden of unsurpassed fertility?

It is not true that the human race has undergone a physical degeneration since the dawn of history or during the thousands of unrecorded years which have elapsed since its appearance on this earth. The idea that in their physical characteristics our forefathers were superior to ourselves is due to the inveterate tendency of the human mind to idealize the past and to assume that everything was better than it is now in the good old days, and it is no more justified in this particular respect than it is in any other. There were giants in those days just as there are giants now, a few of them, individuals whose abnormal development is the result of a disease which morbid pathology has recognized and classified, but that there ever was a race of giants there is no reason whatever to suppose.

Under our system of choosing Presidents, each State casts its entire electoral vote for the candidate who receives the largest number of individual votes at the November election. The members of the Union thus come to occupy relations to the political parties much like those of every-day citizens. Certain States are always Democratic; others are as regular in their Republican adherence, while a third group moves from one side to the other, according to the issues and candidates of the campaign. States which are neighbors with kindred interests usually vote in about the same way. There is thus an element of personality imparted to the commonwealths. Of the eleven which in 1856 voted for Fremont, the first Republican candidate, eight have never since that time voted any other ticket in a Presidential election. Of these Fremont states, New York and Connecticut have supported the Democratic nominee in several great contests, while Wisconsin has been Democratic once. On account of the upheaval produced by the Civil War and reconstruction, but few of the nineteen States which voted for Buchanan nearly half a century ago have been steadfast in their Democratic allegiance. Illinois and Pennsylvania switched to the other side in the very next contest; the former has been Democratic but once since that time, and Pennsylvania never. Maryland, in 1856, voted for a "third-party" candidate. Fourteen new voters "have become of age" since 1856. Of these only Minnesota has been steadily Republican in the Presidential elections. None has been invariably Democratic, although West Virginia voted for Tilden in 1876, and for every subsequent Democratic candidate down to Bryan. A group of these States which are west of the Missouri have been Republican except when the silver issue was uppermost. It is often asserted that state-lines are fading, and in some respects this is true. But as each Presidential contest rolls round, these units of government will assert their individuality so long as the present electoral system prevails.

Ever since the world began some wives have been the making of their husbands and some other wives the ruin of theirs. Also there have been some philosophers to see in the marriage institution the highest good of life and some cynics to condemn all marriage. It is from a different point of view than these that Clarendon Brereton approaches the ever new subject in the columns of the London Times. He has convinced himself by what he considers to be an inductive process that marriage in the present day is a serious handicap to men, and he draws the conclusion that if women don't cease making it a handicap the bankruptcy of marriage and the consequent end of all things social is in immediate sight. To begin with, Mr. Brereton describes to us "the increasing exigencies of the modern married woman." That means the wife is enlarging her demands on her husband's time, energy and money. She spends too much, because she wants to start in life where her parents left off, and "nothing we know can withstand the opportunities of the woman with a purpose." Then, "even if honest John has been all day between the shafts, he must be bridled and saddled for the evening, and often for the afternoon as well." In other words, he must go to parties and balls. By and by he gets pneumonia, "and his wife's vanity and selfishness were largely responsible for the simple complaint carrying him off." It would seem as though that were the end of the husband. Yet Mr. Brereton in his next sentence announces: "But the import that the Benedict of to-day must carry does not end there." We expect to be taken to the nether world, but we are wrong. Mr. Brereton simply moves onward to the woes of husbands in "lower" social classes. We are shown how hard it is for the "assistant secondary master" or for the "shop assistant" to get a job if he has a wife, and how impossible it is for a laboring man with a large family to find a home and a livelihood. Clearly this is all the woman's fault. Even a masculine declaration of independence won't help, for that would only hasten the ruin of society. Mr. Brereton implies that he knows the remedy, but he has not space in his letter to tell. While we are waiting for him it would be interesting to hear from Mrs. Brereton—if there be one—or, at any rate, from a feminine Clarendon.

Learning a Boy's Age.

While the agent was selling farm machinery at the house, the friend at the gate held his horse, and a conversation took place with the small boy of the family.

With grave incredulity, he was saying: "Are you sure you are only nine years old? I think there must be some mistake."

The boy was positive; but to make sure: "Ma" he called. "Ain't I just nine years old?"

After a time he ventured: "Say, mister, what made you think I was more than nine years old?"

"Why," said the stranger, "I couldn't understand how you could get so dirty in nine years."

In His Line.

"He's become very pompous and exclusive since he came in for his fortune."

"Well?"

"Why, he was nothing but a humbug before."

"Well, then, it's natural enough for him to go in for haughty-culture, isn't it?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Too Talkative.

"Went to the mountains on your vacation? Why, Gassaway told me you were going to the seashore."

"Yes, I'd like to strengthen that fellow. I told him I preferred the seashore, and he mentioned it to my wife; so, of course, we went to the mountains."—Philadelphia Press.

Drying the Umbrella.

During the frequent use of umbrellas in the spring showers we should keep in mind the oft-repeated caution concerning drying them. They will last much longer if they are always placed, when wet, with the handle downward to dry. The moisture then falls from the edge of the frame and the fabric dries uniformly. When it stands handle upward, which is commonly the case, the top of the umbrella holds the moisture and not only takes a long time to dry, but it soon injures the silk or other fabrics used for the cover and rusts the steels. This is the cause of this part of the umbrella wearing out before any other part. Umbrella cases are also responsible for the rapid wear of the silk. The constant friction causes the tiny holes that appear so provokingly early. When not in use leave the umbrella loose.

Plates and Home Life.

As a general proposition, it may be safely stated that every time inventive genius seeks to lighten the burdens of housekeeping, or bring it up somewhere near the standards of economical efficiency reached by other industrial sciences, he disturbs what is popularly called "domesticity" and menaces "home life."

It is true that a tidy, clean, well-ordered house, coupled with prompt, well-served meals, goes a long way in holding a man's love, but enough of that.

On the other hand, if a wife is apathetic, and takes no interest whatever in her husband's affairs, can one wonder if his love becomes a trifle lukewarm? It is hardly necessary to say a word about cooking and housekeeping, but it may be remarked that a tidy, clean, well-ordered house, coupled with prompt, well-served meals, goes a long way in holding a man's love, but enough of that.

Then there is one other important thing, most men have a hobby; indeed, the man without a hobby is hardly a desirable person to marry. Well, a wife should always take the deepest interest in her husband's hobby. It may be argued that the particular hobby may have no interest for her, but she must make herself interested in it; she must show him that his hobby is also hers, and this goes a long way in keeping a husband's love and respect.—Home Monthly.

The flat encourages matrimony and domesticity, for the reason that if it were not for the flats hundreds of young men of moderate salaries who are obliged to be at their places of employment at an early hour would have to forego the pleasure of married life. The flat is not an ideal place in which to bring up a large family. But it is a great boon to young married people who have not reached the point where they can afford to keep an "establishment." The flat is an evolution from industrial conditions in the metropolis. It admirably meets the necessities of modern life. Any ordinances designed to regulate the construction of flats should be directed toward making them fireproof and securing perfect sanitation and ventilation, rather than the curtailment of their benefits.

A Woman Preacher.

Miss Gertrude Von Petzold is a striking type of the much talked of new woman. She recently was offered the charge of the Unitarian Church of Narborough Road, Leicester, England, and thus has become the first woman preacher in the United Kingdom.

Miss Von Petzold is an accomplished student. She has had the degree of master of arts conferred on her and speaks several languages. She is deeply interested in church work and believes that she will command as much attention in the pulpit as would be given to a man.

That Will Interest and Entertain Young Readers.

pealed to, they would readily enough fall into line.

So thought Aunt Mary, as she wrote the following rules for a little 12-year-old nephew, who was the "light of her eyes," if not always the joy of her heart, for though a good-natured, amiable boy in the main, he would offend against the "proprieties" frequently:

Keep step with any you walk with.

Hat lifted in saying "Goodby" or "How do you do?"

Hat lifted when offering a seat in a car, or in acknowledging a favor.

Always precede a lady upstairs, and ask her whether you may precede her in passing through a crowd or public place.

Let ladies pass through a door first, standing aside for them.

Let a lady pass first always, unless she asks you to precede her.

Look people straight in the face when speaking or being spoken to.

In the parlor, stand till every lady in the room is seated, also older people.

Rise if a lady comes in after you are seated, and stand till she takes a seat.

Hat off the moment you enter a street door, and when you step into a private hall or office.

Never play with knife, fork or spoon. Use your handkerchief unobtrusively always.

In the dining room take your seat after ladies and elders.

Rise when ladies leave the room, and stand till they are out.

Eat as fast or as slowly as others, and finish the course when they do.

In passing out of a room, let the ladies pass first.

Do not look toward a bedroom door when passing. Always knock at any private room door.

Special rules for the mouth are that all noise in eating and snacking of the lips should be avoided.

The Q-rious Toy.

This dear little man from Chefs, Who was known by the name of Thing Ku,

Had never had a toy Such as children enjoy Save his own little funny thin quee!

He could make it a whip or a string, Or a snake with a terrible sting; He could tie it in knots,

And, my goodness! what lots Of tricks he could play with the things;

No wonder he smiles askew; Was there ever, in al Chefs, A happier lad than the little Thing Ku, With his little thin quee, think you??

A Keen Scent.

The neighbor had been requested by Eddie's mother to no longer furnish him with candy, as had been his custom. So it happened that on the occasion of the next neighborly call Eddie's disappointment was great.

At last he remarked, "It seems to me I smell candy."

Impudent so indirectly, Mrs. A. presented him with a diminutive portion.

Looking at it long and earnestly, Eddie was heard to say, "Could it be possible I smelled so small a piece?"—Lippincott's.

ed that it was not long before the training lessons were completely learned, and the young dog was thoroughly fitted for his work.

It was amusing to watch Jack's kindly, patronizing way toward these dogs as soon as they were conquered and then let out of their harness. While they were being broken in he had appeared to be the personification of fierceness and anger; when they had surrendered, in doglike fashion he was effusively affectionate.

Some of them were, at first, not much inclined to receive these friendly advances; but eventually, perhaps after he had fought a battle or two in their defense, they came to be much attached to him as their friend, while they never questioned his title as their master in the pack.

Rubbed the Barber.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale was strolling the beach at Narragansett.

"I perceive," a friend said to him, "that you have had your hair cut."

"Yes," said Dr. Hale. He smiled and added:

"Why do barbers so often cut your hair in a manner directly opposite to the one you have requested, and then say to you complacently, at the end of the operation, 'Does the hair cut suit you, sir?' You have to answer that it does. Why say it doesn't? It is too late for any change to be made."

It often causes headache and dizziness, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, and affects the voice.

The American who happens into Newfoundland will find innumerable causes for interest and surprise. The interior of the Island is a wilderness primitive and practically unexplored.

A quaint, slow, uncertain railway traverses the heart of the island, but for 500 miles of travel over mountains, through dense forests and by the margins of salt water bays and estuaries not a town is to be seen. Herds of caribou, as tame as barnyard cattle, stand staring at the passing train.

From the bosom of lake and river trout and salmon are forever leaping.

Brant geese, wild ducks, grouse and many wild birds that migrate higher in the summer can be found all over the island. Here they mate and brood, and their goslings and chicks make the woods and waters vocal all summer long. Newfoundland, like Ireland, is innocent of snakes or reptiles.

A letter from President Lincoln, urging the adoption of an anti-slavery clause was read at a mass meeting in the interests of a new State constitution in Baltimore, Md.

Chronic Bronchitis.

After repeated attacks of acute bronchitis, especially in those past the middle of life, there is a tendency for the disease to become established as a chronic affection. When this occurs a perfect cure is hardly to be expected, unless, perhaps, the patient is able to take up his residence permanently in a warm climate. Even when a cure appears to have been effected the mucous membrane of the bronchial tubes remains vulnerable, and very slight causes will then bring about a return of the trouble.

There is usually more or less cough accompanied by thick expectoration, especially in the morning. Sometimes the chest is sore, and coughing excites a rasping pain. The heavy cough, returning in repeated attacks and finally becoming almost constant, at least from early summer well on into the autumn, at last causes a dilatation of the air-cells in the lungs. This condition—pulmonary emphysema, as it is called—induces a sort of asthma in which expiration is difficult, longer than usual, and accompanied by more or less wheezing.

There is usually little to do for chronic bronchitis in the way of drugs. The so-called expectorants or cough mixtures are needed, as a rule, only when there is a fresh cold caught on top of the chronic condition. At such times the cough may become racking and incessant and call for quieting remedies. Cod-liver oil is almost always good for these patients, unless it spoils the appetite. When it cannot be borne,—and when it can also,—the sufferer should eat plenty of butter and use cream freely.

When the patient is gouty, a not unusual contingency, an antigout regimen should be adopted. If possible, the colder part of the year should be spent in a warm climate. The dry air of the interior is preferable to the damp east winds of the Atlantic coast; but as the heart may be affected secondarily to the lung trouble or to the kidney trouble which is frequently associated with it, the high altitudes, such as the Rocky Mountain region, are to be visited with caution.

As will be seen from the general line of treatment indicated, hope for sufferers from chronic bronchitis lies in doing all that is possible to keep the general condition built up by hygienic living and a generous diet—Youth's Companion.

BEES CURE RHEUMATISM.

Most persons have heard that a bee sting will cure rheumatism or lumbago, though few sufferers have actually tried the remedy. Formic acid, derived from bee stings, is now being extensively used as a cure for these diseases.

On the end of the sting, which is about one-thirty-second of an inch long, is a tiny sac containing a drop of formic acid. This sac the bee detaches with the sting after the latter has been deposited in the flesh.

"My dear," said Mrs. Newley, her face flushed with the excitement of her afternoon in the kitchen, "I want you to be perfectly frank with me now.

"Well," replied Mr. Newley, lifting one with a slight effort. "I think it might be better if you made the hole bigger."—Cincinnati Times Star.

CHARLEY WHITE, who lives with his aunt and grandma, noticed that the regular black pepper-shaker was filled with red pepper. The clock made entirely of wood, stands three feet high and is 18 inches wide and presents a strange appearance with its dial showing old Roman numerals, with the quarter and half hours also displayed.

Two figures, each a foot high, stand guard on either side of the dial. One represents a skeleton, and at each quarter hour this figure strikes a bell.

The skeleton is supposed to typify the passing of man and the going on of time even after only the bones remain.

The other figure is that of an old man, and in a measure resembles the medieval representation of Father Time.

At each hour, half, and quarter is marked by the clock the figure blows a horn. It is an ingenious arrangement. A reed is fixed in the end of the horn, and the dropping of a small piece of wood allows the air to circulate and pass over the reed, making a peculiar sound.

In addition, there is a bell on the top of the clock, and the hours are rung on this, a hammer striking regularly. The bell has a deep, pleasant sound.

Who built the clock is unknown, but for over 200 years it was in the castle Wallenstein, Bohemia, and in 1869 was repaired by Ritter Freiherr von Frederich. For a number of years it was in the castle Kleinskia, Bohemia, and when the latter place was being renovated the father of the present owner secured possession and presented it to him.

"I had been low for eighteen months with my back and kidneys and also Epilepsy. I had taken everything I knew of and nothing seemed to do me any good till a friend of mine got me to send for Dodd's Kidney Pills. THIS CLOCK A VETERAN.

Timepiece Made Two Years After Columbus Discovered America.

A remarkable clock, over 400 years old, and which still keeps good time and ticks away the seconds and minutes.

Miller's elk is on one of his many cattle ranches, the Buena Vista ranch, in the mountains of Kern County, thirty-four miles east of Bakersfield. When the first cattle were driven there the elk were plentiful. Herds of elk grazed and browsed with herds of steer. With the settlement of the country the elk thinned before the settlers' guns. When but a few were left Henry Miller saw that complete extermination was close at hand and he interfered. He chose the best-wooded portion of his land, containing hundreds of acres of timber and thickets in places almost impenetrable, and built about the great arena an eight-foot fence. The fence was left open at places, and the natural instincts of the elk taught him in time that it was only within this ideal retreat, always guarded from hunters and intruders, that he was safe. The elk of the whole vicinity took up their home there and their numbers had increased within the last ten years.—San Francisco Chronicle.

George Irving and Harry Brice have bought a half interest in the Gravina Island mining property, near Ketchikan. This is said to be one of the best properties in that part of the country.

The Christmas number of the Record-Miner was neat piece of work, editorially, mechanically, and otherwise, and reflects credit upon the management. Mr. W. S. Coutant is now sole proprietor. Mr. Gillette entering the more lucrative business of law practice.

Taking the pictures published in the last Journal as a criterion, Ketchikan has a cornet band of which she should feel justly proud. The band consists of 21 pieces. There is nothing that gives a place the tone that does a good band, and Ketchikan is to be congratulated on having one.

Collector of Customs Jarvis was recently interviewed by a P.I. reporter, and while he said that the population of Alaska is steadily increasing and becoming of a more stable character, the principal industries are mining and fishing. And Mr. Jarvis usually knows whereof he speaks.

It is very evident that during the next year Wrangell is to enjoy a "boom" that will astonish the residents themselves; not one of those momentary convulsions that will last a moment and then die away, but a "boom" that will be perpetual. Several deals in mining properties are now under way that point in that direction.

"You never miss the water till the well runs dry" is the way they put it in most places. Here at Wrangell we never miss the water till that silken wind whistles thru here a few days and everything is dry as a bone. We haven't wells to run dry, though in the absence of any other avenue to obtain water we should have few scattered throughout. However, we presume it is a mere waste of ink to print this suggestion, which the SENTINEL has put forward almost a year ago.

The little statement published today by the collector of customs of this district is quite interesting reading, if it is short. It shows a large increase in 1904 to a marked degree over 1903, an increase that must be highly satisfactory to every resident of Alaska. And particularly is this the case with regard to customs duties in which there was an increase of over 200 per cent. This increase should certainly convince any one that Alaska stock is a pretty good thing in which to invest your money. Thanks to the head custom office for this report.

Kind Words from an Old Pioneer Friend.

Gov. Swineford in Mining Journal:

Dinner.—At his home in Wrangell, Dec. 17th last, R. D. Crittenden who had been a resident of that place, except for a short interval while he occupied the position of deputy collector of customs at old Fort Tongas, ever since 1877. The writer of these lines first met Col. Crittenden, as he was familiarly known, in the early summer of '85, in the city of Washington, when he was an applicant for the appointment to the office of governor of Alaska, with strong endorsements, among which were those of Justice Field, of the U. S. Supreme Court and a dozen or more U. S. senators when and where, though the one was a defeated candidate for the office for which the other was named, a mutual liking of the one for the other was conceived and soon ripened into a warm personal friendship which has never since been crossed by an unkind act or word on either side. Col. Crittenden was a native of South Carolina, and belonged to a distinguished family of statesmen and politicians, the names of some of the members of which are written indelibly in the history of the country. He was a highly educated gentleman—one of the old school—a brilliant conversationalist, with a fund of information seemingly almost inexhaustible, coupled with a sense of wit and humor which served to impress all whom he met, whether friends or strangers, with a high sense of his rare individuality. He served as a colonel in the Confederate army during the war of the rebellion, soon after the close of which he came west to California, where, the writer has been informed, he served one or two terms in the state senate, afterwards coming north and settling at Wrangell. There he found a barren field for the practice of his profession, which was that of the law, and feeling himself too far advanced in years to engage successfully in any active business, he settled down to a quiet life, and became almost a recluse on the little plot of ground upon which he grew berries and raised chickens for the local market. He was always pleased, however, to meet and entertain his friends and to be entertained by them, and it is perfectly safe to say that no one man in Alaska could have truthfully boasted nearly so large a number of warm and sincere friends as he. He had his faults, no doubt, as have all of us, but they were faults of the head and not of the heart which beat with sympathy and sorrow and helpfulness for others in distress—faults which his legions of friends have long since written in the sand, while they remember him only as the genial gentleman, every impulse of whose heart was one of kindness and generosity.

Yester, and a long farewell, old friend! Now that life's fitful dream is over, may you sleep well!

Of course we don't know what conditions in the case may be, but just why the Dolphin and Jefferson should come in here with our bringin' mail, looks a trifle peculiar. The boats are always well, but our people want mail, and want it from both ways, very likely.
